Dear Officers,

I visited the "cleanharbour" exhibition yesterday and realised how bad our harbour water has been. The treatment scheme should be launch as what has suggested in the project. It comes to my attention that the project targets at treating the soiled/polluted water. I support the idea totally but would like to know other than treating the problem, will there be any campaign educating the citizen how to save the harbour water?

One other thing that also need solution to solve. During SARS we all use CHOROX (breach)to clean our house, according to research reports, the massive use could cause various degree of damage to the sewage pipes and the sea, can we do something to correct the damage? This is the question I eager to know.

Polluter Pays Principle is fine, yet prevention and water treating aid could be employed to save the environment. Say, set up a sponsor fund to improve the problem ed pipes and sewage re-construction and put resources in educating the public to aware the importance of a clean-water environment for the good sake of the public health.

I believe the scheme will only be success ed if it draw the publics attention and cooperation. We all want a clean harbour, we had done too much harm to it. Now we should pay for what we have done, it's fair and justice.

Regards,
Chan Siu Lan
